Mass upgrade

National Organisation of Russian Scouts now upgraded the hardware Mark 286 to a better 486 model with a green coating instead of the old blue. The running software is believed to be the same however.

Kookaburra's as animals

Our duty patrol today is the kooraburra. As yesterday, they will be given and explanation of the animal on their shield.

Kookaburras are large to very large terrestrial kingfishers native to Australia and New Guinea, the name a loanword NORS speaker mentioned that this is only one of 3 large upgrades that their systems undertook.

Artyom 1Gb Ram (not to be confused with 'goat') has been replaced with a blue dimm chipset with 2Gb power.

The final of three upgrades is USB Sofie which has been scrapped completely to make way for a blue tooth.

Interview with a Vampire

Nicky Carles has taken the liberty of interviewing Artyom Laletin, the editor of Scout Times.

SUDOKU FOR DEAD HOUR OR MEAL TIME

Q: what have you been doing today?

A: Funny you should ask that, Nicky! As a Duty Officer today, I was running around like a headless chook making sure everyone is where they should be... which of course never happens.

Q: How do you take comments about people not liking your beard?

A: Those people are confused in what they say, they are very crazy, see things the opposite way from the truth and I have nothing left but to feel sorry for them. Such people can only be pitied.

Day 1. Turkeys.

“По традиции нельзя не составить журавля жура жура журавей, журавушка молодой.”

We came here in a car, it wasn't very far.

orienteering, yes, yes, yes, we got lost using our GPS

Artyom is looking rather wierd, that is a totally shocking beard.

Tim hated it when you rhymed cool with pool, our overuse was rather cruel.

But he isn't here this year, who then will bring up the rear?

Kate hit Sofie in the nose, just as well they didn't come to blows.

Sofie must have got a fright,

i would have backed her in a fight.

When will we get our compot? if it doesn't come soon the fruit will rot.

Misha outrageously used a screw, it's just no the scouting thing to do.

He even went so far as to cut a rope, we are beginning to lose all hope.

Day 2. Guides.

We did so much marching practise, it felt like we stepped on a cactus.

Kate and Tamara's photos are cool, they even take them in the pool.

We walked up and down the hill, Just like little Jack and Jill.

Nicky showed us a stretch for our back All we could do was crack crack crack.

We all rushed out to Tamara's scream, And saw her standing covered in cream.

Parents' Day

Today is a very special day. We are having a lot of visitors coming from church, media and perhaps political backgrounds. Keep this in mind please for the entire day.

Bonus Points to whoever makes this!

from Wiradjuri guuguubarra, which is onomatopoeic of its call.

Kookaburras are best known for their unmistakable call, which is uncannily like loud, echoing human laughter — good-natured, if rather hysterical, merriment in the case of the well-known Laughing Kookaburra; and maniacal cackling in the case of the slightly smaller Blue-winged Kookaburra. They are generally not closely associated with water, and can be found in habitats ranging from humid forest to arid savanna, but also in suburban and residential areas near running water and where food can be searched for easily.

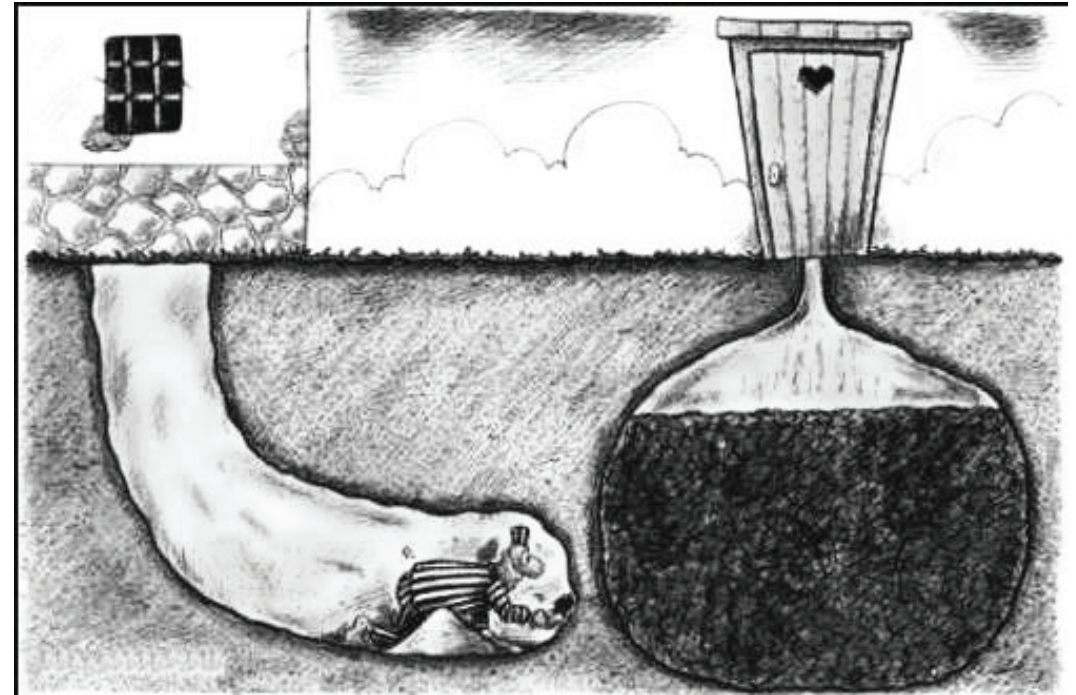

There are four known species of kookaburras found in Australia, New Guinea and the Aru Islands.

Unusual for close relatives, the Laughing and Blue-winged species are direct competitors in the area where their ranges overlap.

Kookaburras are carnivorous. They will eat lizards, snakes, insects, mice and raw meat. The most social birds will accept handouts from humans and will take raw or cooked meat (even if at high temperature) from on or near open-air barbecues left unattended.

They are territorial, and often live with the partly grown chicks of the previous season. They often sing as a chorus to mark their territory.

In the wild, kookaburras are known to eat babies of other birds and snakes, and insects and small reptiles. In zoos, they are usually fed food for birds of prey, and dead baby chicks.

Volchata and Ptenchiki

Both groups had fun making logos of their respectable patrols and competing against each other. This is turning out to be a close competition with both patrols coming to all events first (sometimes before the Duty Officer has a ghost of a chance to be there) and being pretty much on par with each other in all the activities. Scout Times is wishing both Ptenchiki and Volchata good luck in upcoming events.
